INTRODUCTION:

During the 1970's the availability of liability insurance through traditional commercial insurance markets for many public agencies was severely limited. Because the adverse losses and the general public's propensity to view public agencies as "deep pockets," insurers were reluctant to underwrite these exposures. In the mid-1980's conditions worsened and commercial liability insurance was virtually unavailable for public agencies. Consequently, many agencies either joined or formed a Joint Powers Authority (JPA) to provide for and self-fund their liability coverage.

THE ORGANIZATION:

The Public Agency Risk Sharing Authority of California (PARSAC) is a statewide risk-sharing JPA providing coverage for general liability, workers' compensation, law enforcement legal liability, public officials' errors and omissions, auto liability, employment practices liability, and group purchased programs.

Current membership consists of 37 cities and one fire district located throughout the state.

PARSAC is headquartered in Sacramento and has a staff of five. PARSAC has a solid reputation throughout the state, earned by its talented and professional staff.
